

RUGBY ROLEPLAY

Level 2-3

Get in a small group and role-play one of the following situations. Act out the whole thing and then add in your original ideas.

It's Saturday afternoon and there is a really important test match on television. You have been looking forward to it all week. You are just about to start watching the test when some friends of your parents arrive. They are not interested in rugby and your parents want to sit in the lounge and talk to them. There are no other television sets in the house. Solve this problem.

It is the dying moment in an important rugby match you are playing in. Your team is losing and you need a try to win. The ball heads your way and a player makes a break. He is almost there when he makes an easy pass for you to score. You drop it! How should you react and those around you?

You have just finished a game of rugby and the team you were playing has thrashed you 65-0. What makes it worse is that their team were bad sports. They called out to you and said nasty things. They pushed you in the back, late-tackled you and tripped you up during the game. You are about to line up to shake hands. What are you going to do?

Every time the kicker at a rugby match goes to kick a goal, the crowd boos. All your friends are booing and shouting, but you have been told by your parents never to boo. You feel a little left out. Do you start booing or do you do something else?

You take your four-year old sister to get a hotdog at a crowded rugby game. You buy the hotdog and when you turn around, your sister isn't there. You can't find your way back to your family either. What happens?

You are late to practice because your mum was late taking you. When you get to practice, the coach tells you off and makes you a reserve for Saturday. Do you say anything or protest in some way?
